Former Regimental Organization Has 1541 Enrolment and Harry Baldwin As Colonel

" With the proposed coast artillery comvanies and Honolulu machine gun company, the organized militia of Hawaii will number more than five thousand men, an extraordinary showing. That this is not to be a mushroom growth is evidenced by the men who are in it, by the practical cooperation the plantations are giving and by the support ceaving from the county governments.
White yet existing only as battalions, the guard on Maui and the guard on Kauai are regiments in fact and soon will be regiments in full organization.

This kamasina, who left Honolulu last year for Maui to enter the Fred Baldwin Memorial Home in Paia, died in that institution last Monday, according the seventy of ing to mail advices received yesterday in the Mauna Kea from the Valley Isl-

Englishman By Birth

Cook was born on June 14, 1824, in Plymouth, England, his father being a superior officer in the British navy and distinguishing himself during the wars of Napoleon. Cook was ninety-one years, seven months and seventeen days old. He arrived in Ronolulu on September 16, 1844, and, with the exeption of several months away in Calformin, spent the rest of his life in hese Islands. He was a carpenter and ouilder of ability and known to all as law-abiding and useful citizen durng his long sojourn in Hawaii. When he left Honolulu last year, to spend the rest of his long life in the Fred Baldwin Memorial Home, he was accompanded by an orphaned grandson. Two sons, both carpenters, survive him. They are John and Felix Cook. temembered Death of George IV

When the news of the death of King When the news of the death of King George IV reached Plymouth port, England, on the evening of June 28, 1830, John Cook, then a lad of but six years, stood upon the deck of the line-of-battle ship Bombay Castle, on which ais father was an officer. He heard the minute guns fired from Mount Wise, Davinney With his father Cook on Davenport. With his father, Cook on the following day heard the proclaim-ng of William IV as King of England, the proclamation being read in the town half by the mayor of Plymouth. He also remembered the coronation for tivities of this king and his royal spouse, Queen Adelaide. Cook was an apprentice in Bridport, Dorchestershire, when the late Queen Victoria was crowned. The date was well remembered by Cook because on that day, June 28, 1838, he being four teen years old, a little sister arrived in the Cook household. At a very recent date this sister was reported still living in England.

Traveled Around World

Five years later Cook left England in a troopship bound for South Africa. As the Cape of Good Hope was near-d information was received from two East Indiamen of a Kaffir uprising and he troopship then made port at Hobart Town, where the troops were landsd. The ship sailed for Australia and Cook went with her, remaining at Sydney, from where he shipped later in whaler and landed in Honolulu on

He lived in Hawaii ever since, with the exception of a few months spent n California, where he participated in some of the most exciting incidents of San Francisco's early career. He carded to the grave the mark of a bullet, which was imbedded in his neck when he was shot by one of the famous band of outlaws called the "Hounds." Cook went to San Francisco from

Ionolulu in 1849 and helped build the first wharf ever constructed in the bay. The "Hounds" were then terrorizing the community and had committed all namer of depredations, and murders were not infrequent. On July 4, 1849, he "Hounds" attacked a Mexican amp, burned the place, killed men, wonen and children and then stole away. Went To Freemont's Meeting

A meeting of the law and order men was called for the noon hour, July 8, by General Fremont at the alcade's palace. Nearly a thousand men, among hem Cook, assembled in front of the sleade's residence. Hardly had they pegun discussing plans for exterminating the "Hounds" when a body of about 200 of those worthies swooped town upon the law and order meeting, but a determined show of resistance aused them to scatter.

General Fremont then made a speech and called for volunteers to pursue the lesperadors. Cook was the third man o offer himself, and he was assigned a company of ten men. Two hundred were selected. Fremont gave orders that the outlaws should be taken dead or alive. Cook knew where several of the "Hounds" were to be found, and led the way to the house. The door was battered in and Cook was about to lead the way in when one of the fellows inside shot him, the bullet cutting hrough his neck handkerchief and lodging in his neck, making an ugly

Cook kept on with his command, however, and took several prisoners, who surrendered to the sloop of war Warren. His wound began to trouble ilm and he asked to be relieved from further duty, to which General Fre-nont assented. Cook formed the acuaintance of Benjamin Stark, one of is bark, the Madoum. Stark after-vards became a senator from Oregon. They went north, secured a cargo of umber, and returned.

By this time Cook's neck was a frightful shape, and he cont ashore again at San Francisco. Here he found among the and hills another account assores. and hills another acquaintance, who had been a scout under Fremont. 'ook nursed him through his illness, at he died. Before passing away he cave to Cook an old pistol with a broken spring, which had belonged to General Fremont. He also gave him an

This was the fing raised over Monter by Fremont, when he took posses sion of that town. It was a flag raised temporarily, until such time as the frigate Portsmouth arrived. The flag of the Portsmouth was raised by Capt. Alexander McDuff, who had been in Honelulu. Cook took great care of the ensign, and though often asked to loan it to be used on public occasions in this city, he refused to the last, with but one exception, to let it be taken out, for fear that it would be torn.

As the of welcome to Otto Wallfisch and his husky squad of sphere chasers. As the men stepped on to the wharf, it was "Hello Jimmy," "Oh you Peaches," Hello Big Fellow," "Welcome to our sity," and other warm words of greet-ing that the players heard. The ecception committee took charge of the boys, and with several friends, they entered waiting eutomobiles and were lriven about the city and shown many! lriven about the city and shown many of the points of interest. Next the players were driven to Heinie's Tavern, where they will be quartered during their stay here, and the work of un-packing and getting ready for the prac-tising to come was arranged for.

Every One a Ball Player

As old John Condin, the "King of the Turf" once remarked," a good ball player is like a good race horse; you can tell him a mile away," And Every man on the team acts and looks like a star.
